Comments: As a resident of Buxton, I hold a strong stance against the idea of housing asylum seekers in our town. While I understand the humanitarian aspect of offering refuge to those in need, I firmly believe that Buxton is already facing a myriad of pressing issues that would only be exacerbated by this decision.

Our town is grappling with its fair share of challenges, ranging from economic struggles to limited resources for essential services. Adding the responsibility of accommodating asylum seekers could strain our already stretched resources and lead to increased hardships for both current residents and newcomers alike.

Furthermore, I worry about the potential impact on our community's cohesion and cultural fabric. Integration may pose difficulties, and the strain on social resources could create divisions within the town. I believe that addressing these issues and ensuring the well-being of our existing residents should be our primary focus before taking on the responsibility of housing asylum seekers.

In expressing my disagreement, I do not wish to undermine the plight of those seeking asylum but rather advocate for finding alternative solutions that can address their needs without compromising the well-being of our town. Compassion and empathy remain essential, but they must be balanced with the practical realities of our community's current state.
