Comments: I have lived and worked in Glossop for many years, as have my family and many generations before me.

I am bewildered that structures such as this can seemingly be built, breaking planning rules, and then possibly be passed off as perfectly acceptable at a later date.

I would like to construct something simliar in my own small back garden but I am aware of the planning rules.

This structure is too tall and too bear a boundary, that;s all.

I see it when I go to church and I presume others must see it too.

If everyone was allowed to build what they wanted at the bottom of their gardens despite planning rules in place then all hell would break loose!

As I pass this house many times en route tp Howard Park baths I see that is already has outbuldings at the rear although I assume they could be small, but to erect something as big as this seems completely unnecessary.

It probably cost a few bob to put up but that roofline needs to drop significantly if it is to fall in line with planning.regs.

Most people would be happy with a smaller and less stately shed, and I strongly feel that these owners should too.

Thank you and I hope this helps.
