Comments: I was walking my dog across this land as I do every morning, listening to all the birds and enjoying the natural environment and I came across a deer right in front of me, until it noticed me of course. None the less it just shows the land being used by nature in all its glory. When High Peak Borough Councils own commitment is to reverse nature decline, I hope the planning committee take that into consideration. The below is from High Peak Borough Councils own website.

¿With studies revealing that the UK is one of the most nature depleted countries on the Earth, halting the decline of the natural world has never been more important - and in the High Peak the Council is developing a plan to do just that.

In May High Peak Borough Council declared a nature emergency - a formal acknowledgement of the nature crisis - and made a strong commitment to nature's recovery.

Key to that is the Council's emerging Plan for Nature which provides a review of the current state of nature with the High Peak and recommends how and where nature recovery efforts should be prioritised.

The Plan, which has been developed in collaboration with Derbyshire Wildlife Trust and with input from stakeholders including local biodiversity groups, will form the basis of a formal biodiversity action plan for the Council and also inform Derbyshire County Council's Local Nature Recovery Strategy.¿

In a time where the council are probably looking at areas of land to develop with regards to increasing flora and fauna, why even consider loosing areas of natural beauty that are already in place. With the number of proposed properties and proposed car parking spaces that is a lot of extra vehicles trapping polluted air under the tree canopies in the woodland area. My other worry is the amount of vehicles that would need to access and egress the area via Cottage Lane which is already a real struggle to travel along. I also have a concern that this will add to the strain on local schools, doctors and dentists.
